Competitors

Competitive speech and debate help students develop an arsenal of skills. This life-impacting arsenal of instrumental skills includes public speaking, research, writing and critical thinking, as well as conflict-resolution and effective listening. Our alumni often cite speech and debate as the most rewarding and beneficial extra-curricular activity they participated in. If you are interested in learning more about speech and debate, or want to find a Stoa club near you, visit www.stoausa.org

Community Members

Want to help develop the next generation's finest public speakers?

Come judge at a tournament held across the country or at our National Invitational Tournament of Champions. No experience is necessary because we will provide an orientation for you. These young people are skilled in the art of communication, but they need feedback from a diverse audience in order to improve their skills. Judging requires approximately 2 ½ hours of your time. After listening to our talented, engaging competitors, past judges agree that it is time well spent!

For a more in-depth explanation, a representative can come to your organization and give a short presentation.
